Abstract: A retractor (100) with multiple blade for use in surgery. The retractor may comprise first (110R) and second (110L) elongated portions which are pivotally connected to each other. A first blade (113R) may be connected to the first elongated portion (110R) and a second blade (113L) may be connected to the second elongated portion (110L). The retractor (100) may also comprise a sliding bar (130) having a third blade (134). The sliding bar (130) may be associated with the first and second elongated portions (110R, 110L) such that movement of the elongated portions relative to each other may result in movement of the sliding bar (130) and, consequently, movement of the third blade (134) relative to the first and second blades (113R, 113L). In one embodiment, the retractor (100) may comprise a tension limiting device (5322) so that the third blade (134) may remain relatively stationary as the first and second blades (110R, 110L) are moved. The retractor (100) may also comprise a fourth blade (590) operatively connected to the first and second elongated portions (110R, 110L). The fourth blade (590) may move independently of the other blades or may move with the other blades.
